THE SIMMONS-DURYEA TRAGEDY.

Opening for the Defence-A Pica of Self-Justification Put In for the Prisoner-Postimony Showing Simmons to Have Been the Pursued and Assaulted Party. The interest in the trial of John E. Simmons for the alleged murder of Nicholas W. Duryea, still in progress in the Court of Oyer and Terminer, before Judge Brady, increases as the trial advances. A like large and eager crowd filled the court room yesterday, and hundreds filled the hall and vestibule, being unable to obtain admission. The prisoner, his wife and little daughter still accompanying him, put in a prompt appearance; and if any inference can be drawn from his demeanor, it is quite evident that he does not appear to be moved by any apprehension as to the final result of the trial. The opposing counsel and the jurors were likewise early in their places; and as Judge Brady took on the bench all were clearly anxions to learn the line of defence to be interposed, and how far it would upset the theory of the prosecution. Of course there were varying comments as sustained this theory, which was no less than that of a brutal and unprovoked assault and a cold blooded murder. The testimony elicited prior threats by Simmons; that he was on top of Duryes, and, after saying "Now I have got the best of you [3] stabbed him, or, rather, that he struck him with something that glittered in his hands. This was the tenor and gist of the evidence submitted by the prosecution. It was thought by many that e defence would finish their side of the case with the same despatch as the prosecution, and that they would get through yesterday, but this did not prove to be the case, and it is not at all unlikely that one or two more days may be required to complete their testimony. Meantime the evidence taken thus far, as will be seen by the published evidence below, seeks to establish the fact that Duryea was the assaulting party, and that Sim-mons acted in self-defence. The first and, probably, leading witness, as will be seen, states that

Dly, leading witness, as will be seen, states that Duryea made two rushes at Simmons, at which the latter fell oack, when Duryea struck him and they fell, Duryea being on top. Very close attention was paid to the testimony.

OPENING FOR THE DEFENCE.

First in the order of the day's proceedings was opening for the defence by Mr. John R. Fellows. He began with a statement of the indictment, and aliaded to the long delay of fourteen months in bringing the prisoner to trial, and the obloquy and reproach during that time cast on him. He then expressed his satisfaction with the jury and the Court, and that his client would now have a fair trial. He thanked District Attorney Phelps that, while he had in no way neglected his official duty, he had in no way sought to interject the prejudices against the prisoner raised by distorted statements. It was, he continued, his own duty to tell them the prisoner story, now for the first time told. What they had so far heard was merely a single scene in the drama. To understand it they must know the previous acts in it. He should claim absolute instification, and that, from his previous knowand so far heard was merely a single scene in the drama. To understand it they must know the previous acts in it. He should claim absolute justification, and that, from his previous knowledge, he was under such fear that he had no reasonable resource but what he did. And first he recalled to them that the prosecution had not pretended that Simmons sought Duryea; on the contrary, they had shown that the assault was by Duryea. The defence would go further—they would show that Duryea sought Simmons in his office, where he was likely to be at that hour slone, and there used threats and gestures which seemed to show that he was prepared for violence. The deceased left that office long enough before Stimmons left it to have enabled Duryea to reach either Nassau street or Broadway. Duryea did not desire a contest in that office. He knew, though, that this was simmons' time to leave. He saw him with his overcoat on. When Simmons came down on the street he found himself in the grasp of a man who had been waiting for him, whose threats for months had filled the air, and whose terror had induced him to leave public places. down on the street he found himself in the grasp of a man who had been waiting for him, whose threats for months had filed the air, and whose terror had induced him to leave public places where he saw him. And this man caught him, struck him and threw him down, breaking his ankle. He recalled to them that Sherman's testimony was that there was but one blow, which merely staggered Simmons. How came they to fall with Duryea on top? There was something unexplained. They had heard that it was Simmons left ankle that was dislocated and broken. Who intertwined his leg with the other? Would not the man seeking the "lock" use his right jeg? As they stood, front to front, Duryea's right loot was opposite Simmons' left; Sherman said there was no grasping of the throat, but emigraped with such violence as not only to leave its marks, but to cause an irritation requiring days of treatment. He asked them to consider what they would do, with an ankle broken so as to prevent escape, grasped by a man of known ferceness, who was then only accidentally unarimed, by the throat, this the brain was mil. Under such circumstances he called on them to justify the prisoner. The law authorized heay, virtually commanded them to protect their servants even from limminent danger of the perpetration on them of a felony. It need not be even actual danger of its perpetration, but such appearances as made the danger apparently imminent and warranted a benef of danger. He put a similar hypothetical case to themselves and asked them what they would do. A mere blow would not warrant the resort to deadily weapons, he acknowledged; but suppose that blow was inflicted by a most vindictive enemy who had burdened the air with cursings and threats against them; a man who was known as a most desperate man, whose hie had been a house of desperate acts; a man who had entered a house by violence, who on another occasion in a regatta had knocked down a respectable lawyer and drawn his knife on the commodore of the clubs for his known to them—and that they w they would do. He closed with a reference to threats made by Duryea concerning Simmons and a criticism of some of the testimony for the prosecution. The address, which occupied considerably over an hour, was instead to with the closest attention.

BYIDENCE FOR THE DEPENCE—TESTIMONY OF ROBERT H. CLARK.

After some order femarks from M. J. G. Carter siderably over all noise; was instead to with the closest attention.

The first witness called for the defence was Robert H. Clark. He testified that on the evening of the homicide he was in Adam & Co.'s office, No. of Liberty street, where he was employed; hearing a heavy step go up the stairs he looked out and recognized Duryea, and saw him go up to the prisoner's office, on the floor overhead; witness went up to Simmons' on business and saw buryea there, whispering with a man behind the souther; simmons came out and asked Duryea if he was there on business and asked Duryea if he was there on business and thea went into the office; they had an altercation about something was sether; he heard Simmons desire. Duryes took his hands appearently out of his pockets, and puryea drew out a handkerchief with trowsers' pocket and put them into his overcoat; Simmons again asked him to take his hands out of his pockets, and put them into his overcoat; Simmons again asked him to take his hands out of his pockets, and put them into his overcoat; Simmons again asked him to take his hands out of his pockets, and put them into his overcoat; Simmons again asked him to take his hands out of his pockets, and put them into his overcoat; Simmons again asked him to take his hands out of his pockets, and put them into his overcoat; Simmons again asked him to take his hands out of his pockets, and put them into his overcoat; Simmons again asked him to take his hands out of his pockets, and bright him to have the him to his overcoat; Simmons again asked him to take his hands out of his pockets, and him to take his hands out of his pockets, and put them into his overcoat was provided to the pockets, and him to take his hands out of his pockets, and him to take his hands out of his pockets, and him to take his hands out of his pockets, and him to take his hands out of his pockets, and him to take his hands out of his pockets, and put the manufacture him to him to him to him to him to him to

BUSINESS IN THE OTHER COURTS.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT.

The Glenham Manufacturing Company-Important Case.

Some time since a petition was filed praying that the Glenham Manufacturing Company be de-clared bankrupt. On this petition Judge Blatchford adjudicated the company bankrunt, and Floyd Bailey was appointed trustee. It appeared that the Marshal, acting under the warrant of the Court, took possession of the property of the com-pany; but it is claimed that before he did so actual possession of it had been obtained by a Mr. Carpenter, who had been, in certain pro-ceedings in the State Court, appointed as receiver of the estate. The Marshal claims that he holds the property by virtue of the warrant issued from the United States District Court, but he has been called upon, under an order of the State Court, to show cause why he keeps possession of the property or be punished for contempt. Mr. J. H. Choate, who appeared on behalf of the petitioning creditors, said that the property was now in the custody of the Marshal and he asked that it be delivered to the trustee. With regard to protection or indemnity to the Marshal, the Court had the whole of the property; it was in the keeping of the Marshal; and three-fourths of the creditors had united in a deed to the trustee.

Mr. J. C. Carter, who appeared as counsel for the Marshal, observed that every step to be taken in this case should be taken with care. Mr. Choate had said that the Marshal had taken possession of the property. It had been surrendered to him, and he should be property. had said that the Marshal had taken possession of the property. It had been surrendered to him, and he should be protected in its possession. The receiver in the State Court had been appointed prior to the adjudication in bankruptcy, and he had taken possession of the property before the Marshal acquired any control of it. To proceed with this case in two courts was simply impossible. One or other of the courts must yield. A conflict between them would be avoided by ascertaining which Court first acquired jurisdiction. If the State tribunal had first acquired jurisdiction, the United states Court would never interfere with it by its process. There might be something in the Bankrupt law that overrides that principle; but if there was he did not know anything of it. The possession obtained by the United States Marshal was obtained without force. It was silently and quietly yielded to him under the authority of the receiver. What was the effect of that? Was that such an acquiescence as would preclude the State Court from again resuming its authority over the estate? An order had been issued calling upon the Marshal to show cause why he should not surrender the property to the receiver or be punished for contempt. He (Mr. Carter) had hoped that Mr. Carpenter, the receiver, would see that such a thing as a collision of authority between the State and federal courts should be avoided.

Mr. Choate remarked that when the Marshal went up to Gienham ne got possession of the pro-authority between the State and federal courts should be avoided.

Mr. Choate remarked that when the Marshal went up to Glenham he got possession of the property, and if the receiver was there with his subordinates he never neard of him until two months after—until, in fact, he was about to turn over the property to the trustee. The duty of this Court was to maintain its possession once peaceably and legally acquired. He wanted to protect the Marshal, who, having once lawfully obtained possession, should not have ittaken from him by another tribunal. The personal liability of the Marshal in this case, as it seemed to him (Mr. Choate), had been greatly exaggerated. This property having been acquired by the Marshal under the warrant of the Court, if turned over to the trustee in due course of bankruptcy proceedings, would be distributed among the creditors. If the receiver did bring a suit against the Marshal, what damage could the receiver show he had sunfered? The creditors would have the legal and beneficial results of the property in dispute.

After some brief remarks from Mr. J. C. Carter in reply,
Judge Blatchford said the principle was well

After some brief remarks from Mr. J. C. Carter in reply,
Judge Blatchford said the principle was well settled that the Court never issued its warrant to the Marshal to take possession of property out of the hands of a receiver in the State Court. He had always held that property in the hands of a receiver in the State Court could not be disturbed at all. When the Marshal took property out of the hands of a receiver in the State Court could not be disturbed at all. When the Marshal took property out of the hands of a receiver in the State Court take must give it up; he would no more sanction a Marshal taking such property than he would sanction a receiver in the State Court taking property out of the hands of the Marshal. If the receiver had this property in his hands at the time the Marshal took it the Marshal had no business to touch it, and ought to give it back.

Mr. Choate read an affidavit, which contained a statement to the effect that the receiver volun-

tein, Jonas Schulein, John H. Tripler, John J. Hill, | but the Judge decided to hold the prisoner for Abram H. Miller, Isaac B. Kleinert.

COURT OF SPECIAL SESSIONS.

The No Jurisdiction Ples. Before Judges Sherwood, Otterbourg and Murray. Philip Cohen accused a young lad, named Frederick Kuch, of stealing a pair of pantaloons from his store on last Wednesday. The evidence against Kuch was tolerably clear, when his counsel interposed the usual plea of non-jurisdiction. The prisoner was found guilty, but sentence was suspended.

Shortly afterwards George Coyle was arraigned for an indecent assault on a little girl named Leah Wills. The piea of non-jurisdiction was again urged; but Judge Sherwood said to the counsel that he thought, after suspending sentence on one of his clients, that counsel would not bother the Conrt again with such interposition. The case was fully tried and argued and Coyle received six months in the Penttentiary. Counsel then moved for arrest of judgment, which motion was denied and exception taken.

Mulholland, the Cockfighter. John Mulholland, of No. 122 Mott street, who wa arrested last week for keeping the cockpit where Mr. Bergh and his officers made their late raid, was brought up for sentence.

The Court imposed a line of $50.

TOMBS POLICE COURT.

Probable Fatal Affray Between Brothers. Before Judge Bixby. Yesterday morning two brothers, named Peter and George Hassett, got into a quarrel, which ended in George stabbing Peter in the right shoulder, inflicting a severe wound, which will probably terminate fatally. Peter Hassett is a butcher in Washington Market and keeps stand No. 70. His Washington Market and keeps stand No. 70, His brother George has been in his employ for some time, and several disputes have arisen between them on account of George's indisposition to work. Yesterday morning Peter spoke to his brother somewhat sharply, and accused him of being at the time under the influence of liquor. After that some hot words were exchanged between them, when George took up one of the buttner knives lieing near and stabbed his brother in the shoulder. The point of the blade entering butcher knives lieing near and stabbed his brother in the shoulder, the point of the blade entering some three inches. The wounded man fell to the moor and lay there bleeding till the arrival of the ambulance which took him to the Park Hospital. George Hassett was arrested by officer Gilmartin, of the Third precinct, and brought before Judge Bixby. He was held on the amdavit of the officer to await the result of injures. Peter, though able to await the result of injuries. Peter, though able to speak treely, positively refuses to have any-thing to say about the affair, and is rather in-clined to forgive his brother.

ESSEX MARKET POLICE COURT. Desperate Attack by a Butcher,

Before Justice Flammer. Wolff Goodmann, who, as the sequel will show, is quite the reverse of his name, was committed yesterday, without ball, to await the result of a terrible wound which he had inflicted on Emil Horst, a resident of Fifty-third street. Horst's injuries are s dangerous that it was deemed advisable to send him to Bellevue Hospital, where his ante-mortem statement will probably be taken. The facts of the case are these :- Goodmann, who is very old, but by case are these:—Goodmann, who is very old, but by no means feeble, is a man of most violent temper and very much given to taking the law into his own hands. At three o'clock yesterday afternoon he caught a small boy in the act of stealing a piece of lead pipe from his butcher shop, as No. 178 Allen streets. He was beating the little boy in a most brutal manner, and a crowd soon assembled. One of them, Emil Horst, the wounded man, remonstrated with the butcher, but only received abuse for his pains. About half an hour after this Horst was again passing Goodmann's shop, and the latter commenced abusing him. Horst stood at the shop door and made some regimes to the butcher which annoyed him, and, rushing to his chopping block, he snatched up a large cleaver and deatt Horst a fearful blow with it on the side of the skull. The blow knocked Horst senseless, and it is thought his skull is fractured. Officer wandling, of the Tenth precinct, arrested Goodmann, and brought him to Court, in company with the desperate looking cleaver, covered with blood. Justice Flammer, after looking at Goodmann for a lew mements, asked him a few questions in regard to a lawsuit about a lease which he had some seven years ago, and if he was not the party concerned. Goodmann said he was, and Judge Flammer then said. "Goodmann, do you remember my going into your shop at that time and asking you some questions."

The prisoner denied all knowledge of the interview. The Judge then stated that he was a lawyer in the case at the time, and went to Goodmann's store to ask him a simple question, but that the prisoner snatched up a huge carving knife and would have stabbed him but for the fact of his legs being swifter than the butcher's. It is about high time that the law should trip µMr. Goodmann before he attempts to take any more lives.

The letter stated that the writer had proofs of perjury having been committed four years past when he was testifying in a case. Mr. Gessner took no notice of the letter, and was astonished on the loth of rebruary by the prisoner introducing himself to him at the Germania cast and telling him that he was the writer of the letter signed "Baxter."

This reference to be at the expense of the defendant and upon his stipulation to proceed before said referee on two days' notice."

Sunday Lager. The German lager sellers are very much excited over the action of the Boards of Police and Excise compelling them to keep their places closed on Sunday. A number of them have been summoned to appear and show why their licenses should not be revoked for keeping their saloons open and dispensing beer on the Sabbath. They question the right of the Board to do this, and resterday one of them obtained an order from Judge Pratt directing the Board to show cause why a writ should not issue restraining them from proceeding in the matter of the charges against him. This is regarded as a test case.

THE REMODELLED SHERIFF'S OFFICE.

It is now six weeks since Mr. Sheriff William C Conner has taken possession of his office, and in this comparatively short time he has effected the most remarkable changes both in personnel and appearance in office imaginable.

Under the old régime the places occupied by the from each other by railings about three feet high. The front offices and the Sheriff's private apartments remained in the normal condition they were placed in by the Court House Commissioners and lacked, as the entire building does, every requisite of a modern public edifice.

Mr. Conner, on taking possession, determined upon remedying each and every one of the exist ing defects. He set to work with an energy and will which has been crowned with the greatest success, and to-day his offices are models of neat-success, and to-day his offices are models of neatness, compactness and comjort.

Very handsome wire railings and glass windows surmount the deputies' stails or partitions in the long room facing Broadway. The office of Major William H. Quincy, the order of arrest clerk is enclosed with a black wainut and glass partition. In the halls a neat olicloth covers the floors, white Sherist Conner's private offices are neatly and substantially fitted up with handsome furniture and fine carpets. The cost of all the carpenters, joiners, glaziers, carpet and furniture men amounted to only $3,700, which the county is called on to pay. Mr. Conner expended from his private resources, $1,100 to embellish his own compartments, the expenses of which the city does not bear.

In order to convince the public that a great change has been effected the Sheriff invited a lew personal friends from the Bench, the Bar and mercantile life, besides the representatives of the press, to an inspection of his office yesterday alternoon. Mr. Conner explained to his guests personally everything of interest in his official department. After this, and in his private office the guests were invited to an elegant luncheon, to which ample justice was done.

YACHTING NOTES.

The Prince of Wales has signified his willingness become the Commodore of the Royal Thames Yacht Club. The present Commodore, Lord Alfred Paget, will still support the old club by accepting the post of Vice Commodore, which has lately be come vacant by the death of Lord De Ros. There will also be appointed a Rear Commodore. The sailing committee, as well as the general committee of the club, are now giving their best attention to an attractive programme for the yacht matches in May and June. The schooner yaent Thistle, belonging to the Duke of Hamilton, is fitting out at Cowes for the Mediter-ranean.
